

Excavating and recording the remains of a blacksmith's workshop from the 2nd timber fort.

A corner of a workshop in the second timber fort where soldiers may have had their armour repaired. The fantastically well-preserved neck-guard came from in here. The pits and boxes set into the floor possibly held things and substances that were used in one workshop.

Archaeologists discovered the almost perfectly intact bottom of a barrel set into the floor of what was probably a workshop in the 2nd timber fort.
